

Federal and State Laws: Sexual Assault - California

California law

Sexual Assault

Under California law, sexual assault is engaging in sexual intercourse, oral or anal sex, or even slight penetration (including with an object), without the other person's consent.

Sexual Battery

Sexual Battery is touching (including through clothing) someone's intimate body parts for sexual arousal, gratification, or abuse, if the touching is accomplished:

- against the victim's will,
- while the victim is unconscious or incapacitated, or
- using force or fraud.

Disorderly Conduct

Disorderly conduct includes these sexual offenses:

- Voyeurism means peeking in a door or window of another person's home for no legitimate reason, or intentionally invading a person's privacy by using a telescope, binoculars, a mobile phone, or any other device to view the person in a place where privacy is expected.
- Video voyeurism is secretly using a concealed video imaging or photographic device to record another person's intimate body parts (clothed or unclothed) without consent, in a place where privacy is expected, for the purpose of gratifying the viewer's sexual desire or invading the other person's privacy.
- Unlawful distribution of images occurs when someone causes another person serious emotional distress by distributing an image of that person's intimate body parts, or of that person engaging in a sexual act, under circumstances in which it was understood that the image would remain private.

Reporting Laws

Under California law, campus officials must alert campus or local police as soon as possible when a student or employee reports a violent crime, including:

- sexual assault or battery
- homicide, robbery, or aggravated assault
- hate crime

No identifying information about the victim or the accused may be included in the report without the victim's consent, except the accused's identity may be disclosed if the institution determines that the accused presents a serious or an ongoing threat to campus safety, and immediately notifies the victim of the disclosure.

This law applies to California colleges and universities that receive state financial aid funds and have more than 1,000 full-time students.

California law also requires certain employees of postsecondary institutions to report suspected child abuse or neglect, including athletic coaches and other employees who have regular contact with children.
